FOR A GP PRACTICE

The record GDPR expects a practice to keep, on one page.

Article 30 of the GDPR asks every practice that holds patients' health data to keep a written record of what it does with it, whatever its size. This is an example for a made-up practice. FourWinds writes the real one with you, from what your systems actually hold, and keeps it current.

● SAMPLE RECORD. TULLYVANE IS A MADE-UP PRACTICE

TULLYVANE FAMILY PRACTICE

The seven things the record has to hold.

GDPR	THE RECORD SAYS	FOR TULLYVANE FAMILY PRACTICE
Art. 30(1)(a)	Who is responsible	Tullyvane Family Practice, Main Street, Tullyvane. Data protection contact: the practice manager, dataprotection@tullyvanepractice.example.
Art. 30(1)(b)	What the data is used for	Care and treatment; referrals and test results; prescriptions; medical card and insurance claims; appointments, accounts and staff records.
Art. 30(1)(c)	Whose data, and what data	Patients: contact details, date of birth, PPS and medical card numbers, medical history, medication, allergies, test results and notes (health data, a special category). Staff: contact, contract and payroll details. Suppliers: business contacts.
Art. 30(1)(d)	Who receives it	Hospitals and consultants for referrals; laboratories; pharmacies for prescriptions; the HSE Primary Care Reimbursement Service for medical card claims; insurers when a patient asks. Suppliers that process it for the practice (the practice system, IT support, email), each under an Article 28 contract.
Art. 30(1)(e)	Transfers outside the EEA	None known. Each supplier's hosting is checked, and any transfer is listed here with its safeguard, such as standard contractual clauses.
Art. 30(1)(f)	How long it is kept	Patient records: the period in the practice's retention policy, with the reason written beside it, reviewed once a year. Payroll: six years from the end of the tax year.
Art. 30(1)(g)	How it is kept safe	Two-step sign-in on the practice system and email; access removed the day someone leaves; encrypted backups with a restore tested each quarter; email protected against forgery (DMARC); paper records in a locked room.

The two clocks beside it

- A patient asks for their data: answer within one month. Two more months are allowed for complex or many requests, if the patient is told why within the first month (Art. 12(3)).
- A breach: tell the Data Protection Commission within 72 hours of becoming aware, unless it is unlikely to put anyone at risk (Art. 33(1)), and tell the patients when the risk is high (Art. 34).

What FourWinds does

Writes this record with you from what your systems actually hold, keeps it current when a supplier or a system changes, and keeps both clocks on one screen, with every request and breach logged against its deadline. The record is free in the FourWinds portal.

Oscar Cobbe, FourWinds Digital oscar@fourwindsdigital.com

Sources. GDPR Articles 9(1), 12(3), 28, 30(1), 30(5), 33(1) and 34; Taxes Consolidation Act 1997, s.886. Article 30(5) lifts the duty from organisations under 250 staff only where none of the processing involves special categories such as health data. Tullyvane is a made-up practice and every detail above is an example, not advice for your own.